Editorial Preface

On behalf of the Board of the Journal Borneo Administrator (<https://samarinda.lan.go.id/jba>), I am glad to present the JBA Volume 18 (2). After DOAJ at this time, Dimension also becomes indexer in JBA. One of the reasons for using Dimension as an indexer is because Dimensions is the only database that links publications and citations with grants, patents, clinical trials, datasets, and policy papers to deliver a more holistic view of the research landscape. Along with the variety and quality of published manuscripts, we are also preparing a better network to provide a more tangible impact for our stakeholders.

All these are promising signs. We could reach this stage through the constant support of board members and the intellectual generosity of the readers and contributors (authors and reviewers). One of the objectives of this journal is to encourage publication from the area of public administration research that helps to enrich further discourse. We take this opportunity to thank the authors for sending their manuscript for review by our reviewers with their excellent work.

This publication is consistent with seven manuscripts. Aris Maulana et al. tried to discuss the current trending phenomenon in Indonesia. It is about Bureaucratic Reform Through Delaying in the bureaucracy. The author wants to convey to the reader that the plan to simplify the bureaucratic structure by streamlining the echelon system is one of Indonesia's strategies and breakthroughs of bureaucratic reform. This manuscript shows us that delaying within government institutions in Indonesia can provide effective and efficient changes that occur within the governance management of government institutions in Indonesia.

Furthermore, related to the decentralization policies, Arief Priyo Nugroho & Sri Handayani criticize the current practice of decentralized health policy. They see that there is still a problem with inequalities and inequities after decades of experiencing health decentralization. Based on their research, they offer an asymmetric decentralization policy in the health sector. In this context, an asymmetrical approach to managing health answers diverse context responses in implementing decentralization and inequality and inequity issues.

On the other hand, approaching the election year, Ardiansyah & M. Rafi offers a fascinating manuscript for ASN to maintain neutrality. Taking the locus in Riau Province, they try to explain the role of Malay culture in maintaining the impartiality of the bureaucracy.

Meanwhile, I Gede Ari Erawan et al. offer to improve the government's performance accountability system through a balanced scorecard. They try to analyze how the Indonesian Central Government employs BSC and strategy maps to enhance its performance accountability systems.

Another discussion is quite interesting to discuss. It is about border development policy. The complexity of the problems that occur in border areas, especially in North Kalimantan, still needs to be resolved with better policies. Thus, in their research, Samuel Rizal et al. consider it necessary to change policies based on the people centre of development-oriented to people's economic development for sustainable communities through accelerating economic growth, improving the quality of human resources, and strengthening institutional capacity for border area development.

The last two discussions are also crucial in this journal, related to strengthening supply chain network policies for rubber farmers. An analysis conducted by Maratun Saadah & Agus Tiyara in Batanghari Regency concluded that Batanghari Regency government should re-examine their plantation regulation regarding the marketing mechanism until the lowest level, villages. In addition, Sunardi Purwaatmoko has researched elite behaviour in Indonesia's political reform era.

All the manuscripts contributed to this edition are diverse but still within the scope allowed in the JBA. Hopefully, it can be a reference for JBA stakeholders. Finally, we would like to thank all contributors who have contributed to the publication of volume 18 (2) 2022 just in time. Our appreciation goes to all of you.

Warm Regards,

Editor
